"Decades beyond childhood, Daniel Kaufman has found a use for crayons that can only be described as transformative. Melting stick after stick over a surface, dribbling, dripping and pooling, Kaufman allows his encaustic to accrue until it's stretching across white surfaces like rainbow-colored galaxies- or, even more gloriously, seeping and crystallizing all over the picture plane like molten cloisonné."-- Nationally renowned art critic Peter Frank, art critic for the LA Weekly

Robert Berman's DANIEL KAUFMAN; ENCAUSTIC PERCEPTIONS has been extended through April, which assures that no one will miss the delightfully brilliant hues and colors of Kaufman's self-described "non-random beauty".

"LA artist Daniel Kaufman has been commissioned by Crayola Corporation to melt Oprah Winfrey's favorite colors onto an encaustic (melted wax) painting. Several of his Crayola creations hang next to Picasso and Miro works (also created with crayons) at the Crayola Factory Museum in Easton, Pennsylvania."--Cathy Griffin, LA CONFIDENTIAL magazine, Fall, 2009
