Kinetic Sculptures that Move in the Wind

Fredrick's monumental sculptures are colorful and gigantic--always life-sized and sometimes larger. Ingeniously designed with sculptural methods that have been perfected over time, each animal is an individual. Through variations on size, body contours, colors, and patina, no two are alike. Perhaps the most remarkable aspects of these wonderful beasts are their kinetic engineering; they move naturally in the wind. The heads of each animal are precisely balanced on their bearings, enabling them to move up and down when the wind blows. The resulting motion closely resembles an animal's natural manner. This movement lends a life-like quality to these ultra-contemporary sculptures and is the trademark of Fredrick.

Those who find joy in his work come from every walk of life. A vast audience, including sophisticated art collectors, museums and corporations, make his sculptures a part of their lives.

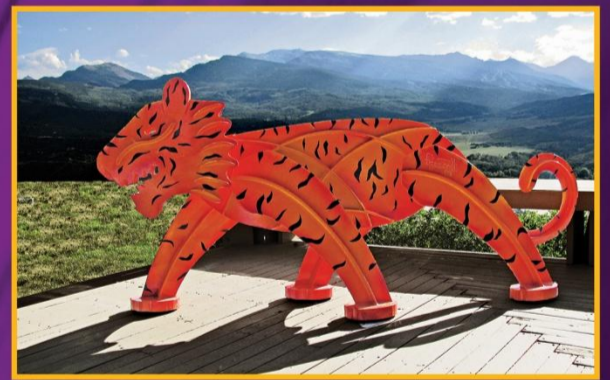

Fredrick's artwork is a reminder to everyone that daily life in itself is full of an infinite amount of movement and color, and is the first place one might look for inspiration and enjoyment.
